

Collision Risk

The presence of marine renewable energy devices, especially the rotating blades of tidal turbines, may be a risk to marine animals. Animals could get hit by the slow-moving turbine blades if they get too close to the device. Collision with the moving parts of a device could injure or harm marine animals. To date, zero collisions with tidal turbine blades have been observed.

