

Displacement

When large numbers of marine renewable energy devices are placed in the ocean, it may cause animals such as large fish or whales to move away from their normal home range or swim around the array of devices. Gray whales, for example, may need to swim longer and farther to go around marine renewable energy devices.

