

Habitat Change

Most marine renewable energy devices must be attached to the seafloor in some way, which may alter the habitat of marine animals all the way from the seafloor to the surface of the water. A device may change where marine species live by removing or adding places to shelter or find food, and could also affect their behavior.

