

Underwater Noise

In the ocean, many marine animals make sound to find each other, to find food, and to escape from other animals. Marine renewable energy devices in the ocean can add noise that could be heard by marine animals. This additional noise could cause stress, change their behavior, or cause them physical harm. However, most noise from these devices is low enough that it is unlikely to harm marine animals.

